Dear Henry,
Having just returned from a short holiday in England, my wife and I were both saddened to learn of the death of your wife. What a shock it must have been to you and we should like to ~~say~~ offer you, our deepest sympathy. There is very little we can say to help you, other than time is supposed to be a healer, and let us hope that life will become a little kinder as the weeks roll by. We shall be thinking about you.

Thank you for sending the article about the girls, and I certainly remember them both. If you contact them again please thank them for their kind regards, and I of course reciprocate their wishes. As you know that was a very eventful night for me, and I can still remembers everything that happened very clearly. We really must meet one day as we should have so much to discuss.

I shall finish off now Henry, as there is not much more I can say at such a sad time for you.

My wife joins me in sending our kindest regards, and we both hope that you will, in ^{extremis} due course, feel somewhat better

Very sincerely
Douglas

P.S. We must keep in touch, and I will write you again in due course.
